Supply Chain Due Diligence Regulations: How Does 4C Certification Add Regulatory Value?
Today companies experience increasing societal and governmental pressure to do the right thing and establish social and environmental due diligence across their global supply chains. A few due diligence regulations were already accepted by national governments around the world, and more are to follow: Last week the German government published a draft supply chain law that aims to hold companies accountable for human rights and environmental breaches, starting from 2023. The EU is also working on cross-sectoral European due diligence solutions, including the European Supply Chain Law.

4C supports this important move towards introducing mandatory due diligence regulations on a global level and ensuring responsible sourcing without harming people or the environment. A smart mix of approaches is needed to build a sustainable future for all.

As a reliable and trustworthy certification scheme, 4C represents a ready-to-use due diligence toolbox. 4C enables credible and efficient due diligence process in green coffee bean supply chains through:

- Identifying risks in the green coffee bean supply chains,
- Providing support in ceasing, preventing, and mitigating risks and negative impacts,
- Monitoring and keeping track of progress,
- Facilitating efficient communication.
